Allied health professionals get on board with dental checks

The oral health of children in hospital is recognised as fundamental to their well-being thanks to the Mini Mouth Care Matters programme which is benefiting thousands of children throughout the UK. At the heart of the programme is training for ward staff in hospitals who learn how to 'lift-the-lip' so they have the confidence to look inside the mouth of young patients and understand the signs of dental disease.

In addition to training, a range of resources, including an assessment tool, is made available to hospital-based healthcare practitioners. The programme branding includes a little elephant by the name of Elwood, a reminder to "never forget" tooth brushing. Images of Elwood are now to be found in hospitals up and down the country beside the beds of paediatric patients, and also on posters and leaflets in hospital staff rooms and waiting areas.

Claire Stevens, BSPD's spokesperson commented: "It's incredible to see the way in which this programme is not only embedded as routine in hospitals with paediatric wards but also that it's extending into other settings including the training of health visitors and hospice staff.”

She paid tribute to Urshla Devalia, a Consultant in Paediatric Dentistry. Dr Devalia began devising Mini Mouth Care Matters (Mini MCM) nearly three years ago following the success of the Mouth Care Matters initiative designed to improve the oral health of adult inpatients, which has been extended to include management of residents in care homes.

Dr Stevens continued: “The small adaptations in care delivered by Mini MCM can significantly improve the quality of life of this cohort of children and young people and also provide new knowledge and skills for healthcare practitioners who learn to ‘lift the lip.’ As an innovative and transferable programme, Mini MCM has outstripped its vision.”

Further information:

Mini MCM was modelled on the Mouth Care Matters programme devised and led by Mili Doshi to benefit older patients in residential and hospital settings by training their carers in mouth care.
